This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2010 in the subject Politics - International Politics - Environmental Policy, grade: 1,0, University of Luzern, language: English, abstract: This paper discusses the question what kind of Hydroparadigms exist and which dominate the development discourses in Global Water Governance (GWG) in the UN. Theoretically, I draw on non-critical elements of discourse theory as well as a social constructivist framework and conceptualize Hydroparadigms as the underlying logics and policy philosophies as to how to solve or mitigate the global water crisis. I argue that the actors in GWG are driven by such paradigms, which are central not only to problem perceptions and policy proposals, but also for eventual regime formation. Then, based on a literature review, I deduct a typology system, proposing a three-dimensional map of Hydroparadigms ideal types, each with their specific problem definition, values, norms, policy implications and varying concepts of sustainability. The subsequent discourse analysis is guided by a pragmatic approach, seeing the method as a special text-analysis that is not so theory-laden. Offering a broad overview of UN actors discourses, I conclude that there are four existing and distinct Hydroparadigms statist, community-based, economic, and integrated approaches and that the latter are clearly dominant. 32 pp. Englisch.
