Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Australian Aboriginal and the Christian Church This little book is written primarily for Christians, not merely for ethnologists, and makes no claim to being, in any sense of the word, a scientific treatise. It tells the story of our treatment of the native in the past, it aims at depicting the life he lives on his own ancestral hunting-grounds, and it gives some little account of the various missions and their influence upon him. Attempts are made, in the course of the chapters, to get at the inner working of his mind, to try and find out what the ideas and motives are which sway him, and what the principles of conduct which lie behind his outward acts. The reader will judge how far I have succeeded and how far failed. After all, the Australian aboriginal is much more than an interesting savage, whose customs must be put on record before he becomes extinct. He is a man with a soul - a soul with a destiny - a soul for which Christ died. Is there anything in him which can be called religion ? Are there any ideas already active in his mind which the Christian teacher can lay hold upon, and on which he can build the superstructure of the Christian faith? These questions I have tried to answer. This, surely, is the true spirit in which to set about the study of an untutored people. A savage must not be judged merely by his outward acts.
